invention relates generally to a method of and apparatus for obtaining image information of a target object, for example, of a test subject carrying a fluorescent material, by the use of an X-ray CT (Computed Tomography). More particularly, the invention relates to a method and apparatus for obtaining image information of a target object by the CT image reconstruction processing. An X-ray CT apparatus known in the art comprises an X-ray tube emitting an X-ray toward a test subject, a detector detecting X-ray transmitted through the test subject and outputting a signal in accordance with the intensity of the X-ray, and a computer for performing image processing and the like on the basis of the signal, thereby forming a tomographic image of a desired slice of the test subject on the display screen of the computer. In recent years, a test object, such as a patient, carrying a fluorescent material or a test subject having a fluorescent material applied thereto, has been tested for a medical purpose. The fluorescent material is an agent which accumulates in or decays from a body (living body) of the test subject and emits the fluorescent light of an intensity corresponding to the amount of decay. In order to realize such a test, an X-ray tomographic apparatus has been arranged to irradiate the test subject with an X-ray from an X-ray source, to detect the fluorescent light emitted by the body, and to form a tomographic image on the basis of the fluorescent light. JP-

A-9-169935 discloses a conventional X-ray CT apparatus as mentioned above. The conventional X-ray CT apparatus includes a rotation drive motor for rotating an X-ray tube and a detector about the target subject, a wobble drive motor for wobbling the X-ray tube and the detector in synchronization with each other, and an inclination drive motor for moving a rotation range of a target scan in a direction of a Z-axis. In the conventional X-ray CT apparatus, however, 3da54e8ca3
