When he logs in normally, there is a group policy that is deployed with.AD domain name, and it's not deployed to his workstation. After testing this with 1 user, we decided to do a full deploy. Below you'll find 2 scripts that you can execute on each workstation you want to have group policy deployed. I've used these scripts to deploy the group policy template to 100 systems, with no problems. Script: Basically, this script will create a group policy and deploy it to the computer. For simplicity I'm creating a template with 2 policies: User policies for Group Policy will be created with GPO's and are stored in AD Users and Computers. Also, you don't have to add the Computer's names to be used by the script, which will add it for you. You can also check this script to ensure you have the right location and path where to install the template to. Also check if the script is running as the proper user account. The user account could have changed for example, if the computer was rebooted. Output: You can see in the picture that every machine will have the group policy deployed to it. One thing I suggest is to create the files manually with a text editor
