Easy to use, powerful and feature-rich image processing tool for separating objects from the background The app comes with a clean interface, with an intuitive layout that should make all jobs easy to perform Advanced tutorials that come with the app allow you to learn to perform some of the most complex editing actions Efficient learning of picture background manipulation The program has a clean interface, with an intuitive layout that should make all jobs easy to perform Efficient learning of picture background manipulation The app has a clean interface, with an intuitive layout that should make all jobs easy to perform A: All these tools will work, but I think Paint.NET is a much more usable tool than others. Paint.NET is free, open-source, cross-platform and easy to use. It has a nice (in my opinion) "Learning Curve" and is highly customizable. It has an image-processing extension too, so you can use it as a darkroom. A: This is a pretty subjective question, but if you're asking for an "advanced" way to do this, the "best" way to do this is to do it manually. Some suggestions would be: Run this image through to get an idea of the results you're after. Run this image through to get an idea of the results you're after. Open up a new image, and run your image through to get an idea of the results you're after. You can find more tools like these at Use whatever method works best for you. A: One that isn't mentioned is specifically for portraits. If you want to do this for free as well as have it cross platform, this works well. Q: Get all paragraphs in docx-python Is there any way to get all the paragraphs in docx in python? This is the solution I've got so far: from docx import Document import re with open('.../test.docx') as f: doc = Document() for line in f:
